

Real Fair Work – The Next Frontier

“Keeping ahead of the Game”

Australian Workplace Relations 2009 & Beyond

Please join the Australian Institute of Employment Rights for a complimentary afternoon presentation and panel discussion on achieving improved workplace culture in Australia. Hear Tim Lee in one of his first public presentations as General Manager of Fair Work Australia; ACTU President Sharan Burrow; leading corporate employers; health experts, including Professor Rob Moodie, Head of the Federal Government’s Preventative Health Taskforce; Christina Rich in her first public presentation since her famous case against PricewaterhouseCoopers - all addressing the issue of workplace culture in Australia (see Program over page).

The “Fair Work Legislation” has laid the foundation for the achievement of higher standards of Australian workplace culture.

Improved workplace culture is much needed in Australia and is key to:

- improved business productivity, efficiency, and viability during and post the GEC;
- workforce health and welfare;
- workforce attraction and retention;
- corporate social responsibility;
- being a recipient for responsible investment; and
- Australia’s role as an international “employer”, “educator”, and “business partner” of choice.

The Australian Institute of Employment Rights takes pleasure in inviting you and your colleagues to attend a presentation and panel discussion on the practical means to achieving an improved workplace culture.

The event marks the launch by the AIER of a new book on an “Australian Standard of Employment Rights” – a “How to Guide” for Australian employers, employees and workplace participants generally to achieve improved workplace culture.

The book is authored by Rhodes Scholar, Joanna Howe, edited by Professor Joellen Riley, and assisted by a Steering Committee of leading experts in Australian workplace relations.
